

Have you ever found an owl on the ground?

Neotropical owl
Megascops choliba

These little owls only come into activity at night, eating insects, scorpions, spiders, small lizards and bats. If you are lucky that these owls live near your property, could discover some already fully feathered breeding on the ground or in a bush. This leads one to think that this chick has been abandoned by his parents, but at nightfall they return to feed and take care of their chick. After spending a few more days and when they are stronger, will participate with adults in night hunting. If you find an owl breeding do not intervene unless the chick's life is in real danger.
